Q.1 Read the story, then answer the questions below. 15 points

The White Giraffe

Martine Allen's parents have died and she has travelled from England to Africa to live with her grandmother who owns a wildlife reserve. Tendai, a Zulu tracker, has told her of a rare white giraffe believed to be in the reserve. One rainy night, Martine glimpses the giraffe from her bedroom window. She decides to go into the reserve to find it.

Martine stepped through the gate and stifled a cry of terror. Two red eyes glared at her. The bushes shook violently and a waterbuck sprang up so close to Martine that its fur actually brushed her. With a shake of its horns, it bounded away into the blackness.

Martine's heart smacked wildly against her ribcage. "Focus," she thought. "I have to focus. I can do this." More than anything in the world she wanted to find the white giraffe.

The air was perfume-sweet with the scent of fallen mangoes and gardenia blossoms. Martine set off blindly through the dripping trees in the general direction of the game park gate. The one useful thing she'd overheard during her investigations the previous week had been Tendai telling her grandmother the new code for the padlock. She'd made a point of committing the numbers to memory. When her hands touched the cold metal gate, she felt for the heavy chain that bound it and the lock that secured it. Only then did she switch on her torch and enter the numbers on the wet dial. The padlock clicked open! Martine stared down at it, unable to believe that it had been so easy.

The beam from the torch picked out the path that led down to the waterhole, where the frogs were competing in a noisy chorus. Blue lightning shuddered over the mountains on the far horizon. Martine set off as quickly as she dared, trying to avoid the puddles. Even so, her jeans were soon soaked through. In places the grass was taller than she was and cold droplets drenched her hair and ran down her neck.

As she walked, unseen creatures slithered and scurried and hopped away through the undergrowth. She wasn't sure which she was most scared of, snakes and creepy-crawlies or man-eating carnivores, but she fervently hoped that she didn't meet any of them. After what seemed an age, she saw she'd reached the water's edge.

She tried to pinpoint the exact spot where she had seen the giraffe. She was pretty sure it had been beside the old gum tree that stood, like a startled skeleton, on the left bank of the waterhole. As if sensing danger, the frogs fell silent. Tendrils of mist hovered over the water and the night air was laden with threat. Martine quelled the butterflies in her stomach. She lifted her torch and shone it into the surrounding bush. Nothing moved. Disappointment hit her like a blow. A mythical giraffe! She'd risked her life in pursuit of a fairy tale.

Sheer instinct warned Martine something was behind her. The same sixth sense told her to turn around very, very slowly. A Cape cobra was coiled in the mud barely six feet away from her, hood spread wide, swaying in the yellow torch light. Its golden colouring was unmistakable. So was the band around its throat.

Martine dropped her torch in panic. It rolled behind a boulder and dimmed to a faint glow. Then it went out. In the split second before she was plunged into darkness, Martine saw the cobra draw back its head to strike. Helplessly, she waited for its lethal bite. It never came. Instead, a pale blur exploded from the trees. There was a hideous hissing sound and the flash of flying hooves. The last thing Martine saw before she crumpled to the ground was the white giraffe. (from The White Giraffe by Lauren St John)
