Ethical Restaurants

These days people often cook and eat in - this saves some money and people can also choose what ingredients they use for their meals. But here are some interesting places around the world to eat out and taste great food. They aren't expensive and you can help a few people at the same time.

At Majeda's Restaurant in Amman, healthy hot meals are given to people who cannot afford to eat well every week. Customers who use the restaurant are invited to have a delicious meal using local ingredients and, at the same time, help to buy a meal for someone in need. After they have done this, small meal invitations are put on a board by the entrance to the shop. Volunteers then help out by distributing around 100 free meals a week to people who need them.

The Big Pizza Restaurant in Washington, USA, is a 'pay it forward' restaurant. You pay just $1 for an extra piece of pizza and a homeless person can eat it later. At the restaurant, staff give out post-it notes and customers write personal messages on them. There are also a lot of 'Thank you' messages from homeless people. Around thirty to forty homeless people eat at the restaurant every day - that's 8,500 pieces of pizza in nine months!

All Eats is an 'all you can eat' restaurant in London. You pay £4.50 for thirty different local dishes - almost too many to choose from! Office workers, students, tourists and homeless people sit down to eat together.
