Good manners around the world

There are many different ways to be polite or rude around the world! Let's look at what good manners are in different countries.

Saying 'please' and 'thank you'

All around the world, it's important to say 'please' and 'thank you'. In the UK, if a child asks 'Can I have some water?', a British parent often asks 'What's the special word?'. The child then remembers to say 'please'! And do you know that in the UK most people say 'thank you' to the bus driver when they get off the bus?

Meeting new people

In Jordan, it's polite for adults to give a strong handshake when they meet someone. In Asia, the opposite is true: it's better to give a gentle handshake! In Asia and South America, it's polite to take off your shoes when you go into a home. But be careful when you sit down. It's very rude to put your feet up and show the bottom of your feet!

Good manners with food

In Jordan and the UK, it's polite to eat quietly. In China, it's better to eat noisily. This shows that you are enjoying your food. In India and the UK, it's polite to finish everything on your plate. In China, it's very rude to do that! If you finish everything, it means you didn't get enough food.
