An Inspiring Life

I love stories about people who succeed despite difficulties in life. That's why I'm writing about a man who grew up in a poor family, but who went on to become the greatest boxer of all time.

Muhammad Ali was born in 1942 in Kentucky, USA. His original name was Cassius Clay and he started boxing aged 12. After succeeding in amateur boxing competitions as a teenager, he won a gold medal at the Rome Olympic Games in 1960. He soon turned professional and the media loved his personality. He used to tell people he could 'float like a butterfly and sting like a bee'.

Then in 1964, he surprised the world when he beat famous boxer Sonny Liston to become the heavyweight champion of the world. Two days later, he decided to convert to Islam and he later changed his name to Muhammad Ali.

During the 1960s, Muhammad Ali supported the rights of black people at a time when racism greatly affected US society. He stopped boxing in the late 1960s, starting again in 1970 with mixed success, until 1974, when he defeated heavyweight champion George Foreman in a famous match. The match was held in what is now known as the Democratic Republic of Congo. Ali won to regain his heavyweight title.

When Ali finally retired in 1981, he was the first boxer to have won the world heavyweight championship three times. He died in 2016 aged 74. Many people think he was the greatest boxer of all time. His life shows that even with a difficult start in life, you can be successful with hard work and determination.
