Graham Hughes and the Odyssey Expedition

On 1 January 2009, Graham Hughes from Liverpool, England, sailed across the River Plate from Argentina to Uruguay on a ferry. He was setting out on an incredible solo journey. He was going to visit every country in the world. And he was going to be the first person to do it without flying.

He was doing it to set a Guinness World Record and to collect money for the charity WaterAid. It started well. He visited all 12 countries in South America in only two weeks. But then in the Caribbean, he met his first big problem - islands! You can't travel overland to every country in the world, often there are no ferries between islands and Graham can't walk on water. He solved his problem by hitchhiking on other people's boats.

Europe was easy. He got a railway ticket which allowed him to travel everywhere in Europe by train. It only took him a few weeks to visit 50 countries. Then he arrived in Africa. He was planning on just three months there. It took him almost three years! He had problems with transport and also to get the right travel documents. For example, he had a valid passport, but he also needed a visa to enter Mauritania. Unfortunately, they weren't selling visas at the border. So, he travelled 1,250 miles by bus all the way back to the place where he knew that he could get a visa - Morocco.

During his journey Graham learnt how hospitable people can be. One time when he was travelling on a night bus in Iran, he saw an old woman who was talking on her phone. She handed it to him. It was the woman's grandson. 'My grandmother's worried because the bus arrives very early,' he explained in English. 'She wants to invite you home to make you breakfast.' Graham accepted the invitation.

Finally, after three years, ten months and 21 days Graham arrived in the final country on his odyssey. It was South Sudan, the newest state in the world, a country that didn't even exist when he started his journey.
